The issue of recent (past several years') trends in Soviet non-proliferation behavior is of growing concern--particularly in view of a newly developing bilateral US-USSR negotiation in this area. (See extract from State/PM memo attached.)

STAT

The SPC proposal strikes me as still being focused too much on US-USSR interactions. What we need most is a good basic assessment of how Soviet non-proliferation activities and nuclear supplier arrangements have changed or been modified in recent years. Are they really still "true blue" or is their reputation getting increasingly tarnished?

We think we can get SPC to focus more on this aspect.
